

WAG M D S

Most Distinguished Doctors / 2008

M^{D.D.}, that's the designation for the physicians and surgeons who make WAG's annual list of Most Distinguished Doctors.

Is there really such a thing as a "best" doctor? No, but there are many doctors whose academic credentials, training, and experience are outstanding. They are leaders in their fields, the go-to sources for complex cases, the opinion-makers on new techniques and treatment options. Most important, the medical professionals on our list are the names doctors trust for their own care and that of their families.

WAG's proprietary list is carefully compiled with the assistance of medical professionals and others in the health care field whose opinions and judgment are MDs ▶ ▶ ▶ ▶ highly respected. The respect that these practitioners command from their professional peers factors heavily in our consideration, and for this article we consulted both with medical professionals and others who are prominent in the health care field.

Inclusion on this list is high honor indeed. However, even an MD.D might not be the “best” doctor for you. You should feel comfortable with your doctor; does he or she take the time to help you make decisions? Can you reach your doctor easily without undue delays and voice messaging systems? Does your doctor welcome and take into consideration your concerns and preferences? Be sure you are comfortable asking important questions and don’t hesitate to seek a second opinion; competent doctors are not offended if you want such consultation.

WAG’s list of Most Distinguished Doctors is an excellent resource as you determine your choice of health care professionals. When interviewing a new doctor, remember to ask what will happen when you need him or her the most. Ask, “In the event that I’m hospitalized, who will direct my care?” Increasingly, in-patient care is managed by hospitalists. These hospital employees are doctors who are more senior than residents but are generally only a couple of years out of training. They work in shifts and, although their availability (they’re on site 24 hours a day), specialization (their only job is in-patient care) and comfort with the hospital environment has benefits for referring doctors and patients alike, there are potential downsides that must be carefully considered.

According to Isadore Rosenfeld, M.D., C.M., F.A.C.P., Rossi Distinguished Professor of Clinical Medicine at Weill Cornell Medical College of Cornell University, the key to the success of this system is ongoing contact between the referring physician and hospitalist. “I retain complete charge of my patient as long as I can be contacted and am available,” said Dr. Rosenfeld. “I discuss fully with the hospitalist every one of my patients whom I admit to the hospital. I indicate quite clearly what I believe to be the diagnosis and what treatment I want instituted. I have the last word. Given this information, the hospitalist follows my recommendations.”

Getting the best medical care these days requires more work than ever on your behalf. It’s not just about navigating insurance regulations or finding competent doctors—it’s about understanding the changing world of healthcare in its entirety. Nothing, however, could be more important.
